Henson legacy offers ecology for kids

Canadian Press

WINDSOR, Ont. — The legacy of late Muppet master Jim Henson lives on, in characters with names like Mud-Slinger, Galileo and Eco.

They're puppet players in Groundling Marsh, a new, Toronto-made children's series due to air next spring on YTV.

The environmentally themed series was made on a shoestring budget and the 13 half-hour episodes were produced by J.A. Delmage Productions, known for CTV's The Campbells, and a new company, Portfolio Film and Television Inc.

Portfolio's Joy Rosen and Lisa Olfman, who worked together on film distribution and co-production deals at Venture Entertainment Group, teamed up in 1991 with an idea for making a children's show about environmental issues.

Two years later, said Rosen, 30, the concept has grown.

"When we first conceived the idea, there wasn't a lot on TV that dealt with the environment for kids," she said. "Now there's a lot."

Groundling Marsh focuses on the dramatic relationships between some exotic and bizarre characters including one called Stacks, who is comprised of discarded appliances dumped in the marsh.

THEATRE

Black, Gold and Mr. Shaw

BARBARA CROOK
Sun Theatre Critic

I DARE YOU! TO SIT still during Black & Gold 2. If you don't tap your toes, clap your hands, snap your fingers or sway in your seat throughout this evening of classics and hits by black artists, check your pulse.

The two-hour musical revue at the Arts Club Revue Cabaret, compiled and directed by A Closer Walk With Patsy Cline creator Dean Regan, is a fast-paced, musically solid string of tunes from Birdland to Bad Girls.

Straighten Up and Fly Right, For Once in My Life, Smoke Gets in Your Eyes, a fabulous a capella version of In the Still of the Night and back-to-back renditions of My Girl and My Guy are just a few of the dozens of songs performed in their entirety or in medley.

What makes it more than just nostalgia night are the bright talents of the fine cast. Sibel Thrasher, Howard Dell, Chancz Perry, Sandra Grant and Leora Cashe sing, dance and vamp the night away.

Each of the singers has a special gift. Perry and Grant are also wonderful dancers, Dell can sing anything from bass parts to Stevie Wonder falsettos and Cashe has a rich, emotional voice.

The audience saves a special part in their hearts for Thrasher, and she earns it. She has a great voice and an engaging presence onstage, but it's the vulnerability and the sense that she's giving everything to her songs that shine through the footlights.

The musicians — Jaye Krebs, Lou Hoover and the dashing Craig McGregor — are also solid and versatile, but the music is crushed up so loud that the singers are often drowned out, or have to fight for their share of the sound waves. Turn down the volume, please!

Black & Gold 2 isn't Theatah. It isn't even theatre, except in the broadest sense. But it sure is good music.

LISTENING TO George Bernard Shaw lecture on medical ethics, progress and moral dilemmas for almost three hours doesn't sound like much of an evening.

But the University of B.C. production of Shaw's The Doctor's Dilemma rises to the challenge of Shaw's wordy, physically static play with great gusto — and much success.

The Shavian style of drama, heavy on discussion and light on action, can be hard for a contemporary audience to appreciate. But his subject in this 1906 play is strikingly timely. In an age of limited medical resources, who shall live and who shall die?

Sir Colenso Ridgeon (Chris Robson) has just been knighted for his pioneering treatment of tuberculosis. When a beautiful young woman (Catherine Williams) asks him to treat her talented but morally flawed husband (Peter Grier), the doctor must decide whether to save the brilliant young artist or a penniless but good-hearted fellow physician (Stanley Weese).

To further complicate matters, he wants the young wife for himself, and would just as soon see her a widow.

The first scene is particularly tough slogging, especially since director Christopher Gaze seems reluctant to have his actors move more than is absolutely necessary. But once we get through the lengthy exposition, things get more interesting.

The highlight of the evening is Errol Durbach's marvellous performance as "Bb," Sir Ralph Bloomfield Bonington, who doesn't quite know how a vaccine works but cheerfully injects his patients anyway. Fellow doctors Tony Dawson, Michael Puttonen and Joel Spicer are also highly enjoyable.

The younger actors are hampered by their attempted English accents, which really aren't necessary and are excruciatingly difficult to listen to in Grier's case. Even bright light Catherine Williams, who has the bearing and range of a young Vanessa Redgrave, doesn't seem entirely comfortable with her accent.

Richard Prince's multiple sets, Ronald Fedoruk's lighting and Rosemarie Heselton's costumes all work well. And there's even a visit during the scene changes from the voice of GBS himself, lecturing us on his views of the medical profession.

All I can say is, stay healthy.
